

Warneke Animal Sculptings Displayed at Georgetown

"Heinz Warneke Looks Back," an exhibit of 20 sculpted animal figures by German-born Heinz Warneke, is displayed in the Riggs Library art gallery of Georgetown University through Dec. 17.

The figures are sculpted from granite, wood, brass, bronze, iron, aluminum and terra cotta.

Warneke is a former Washington resident. He retired in 1965 after 22 years as sculptor-master of the Corcoran Art School here. He also taught at George Washington University.

His works are displayed in several cities including Philadelphia's Zoological Gardens and the doorways, columns and gardens of the Washington National Cathedral.

Among his recent works are a war memorial in Lyme, Conn., and interior sculpture for Trinity Church in Upper-ville, Va.

A native of Bremen, Germany, Warneke came to the United States in 1923.

He has received many prizes for his work. He is a member of the National Sculptors Society, the Connecticut Academy of Fine Arts and a life member of the International Institute of Arts and Letters.
